The history of Mas de Mauléon

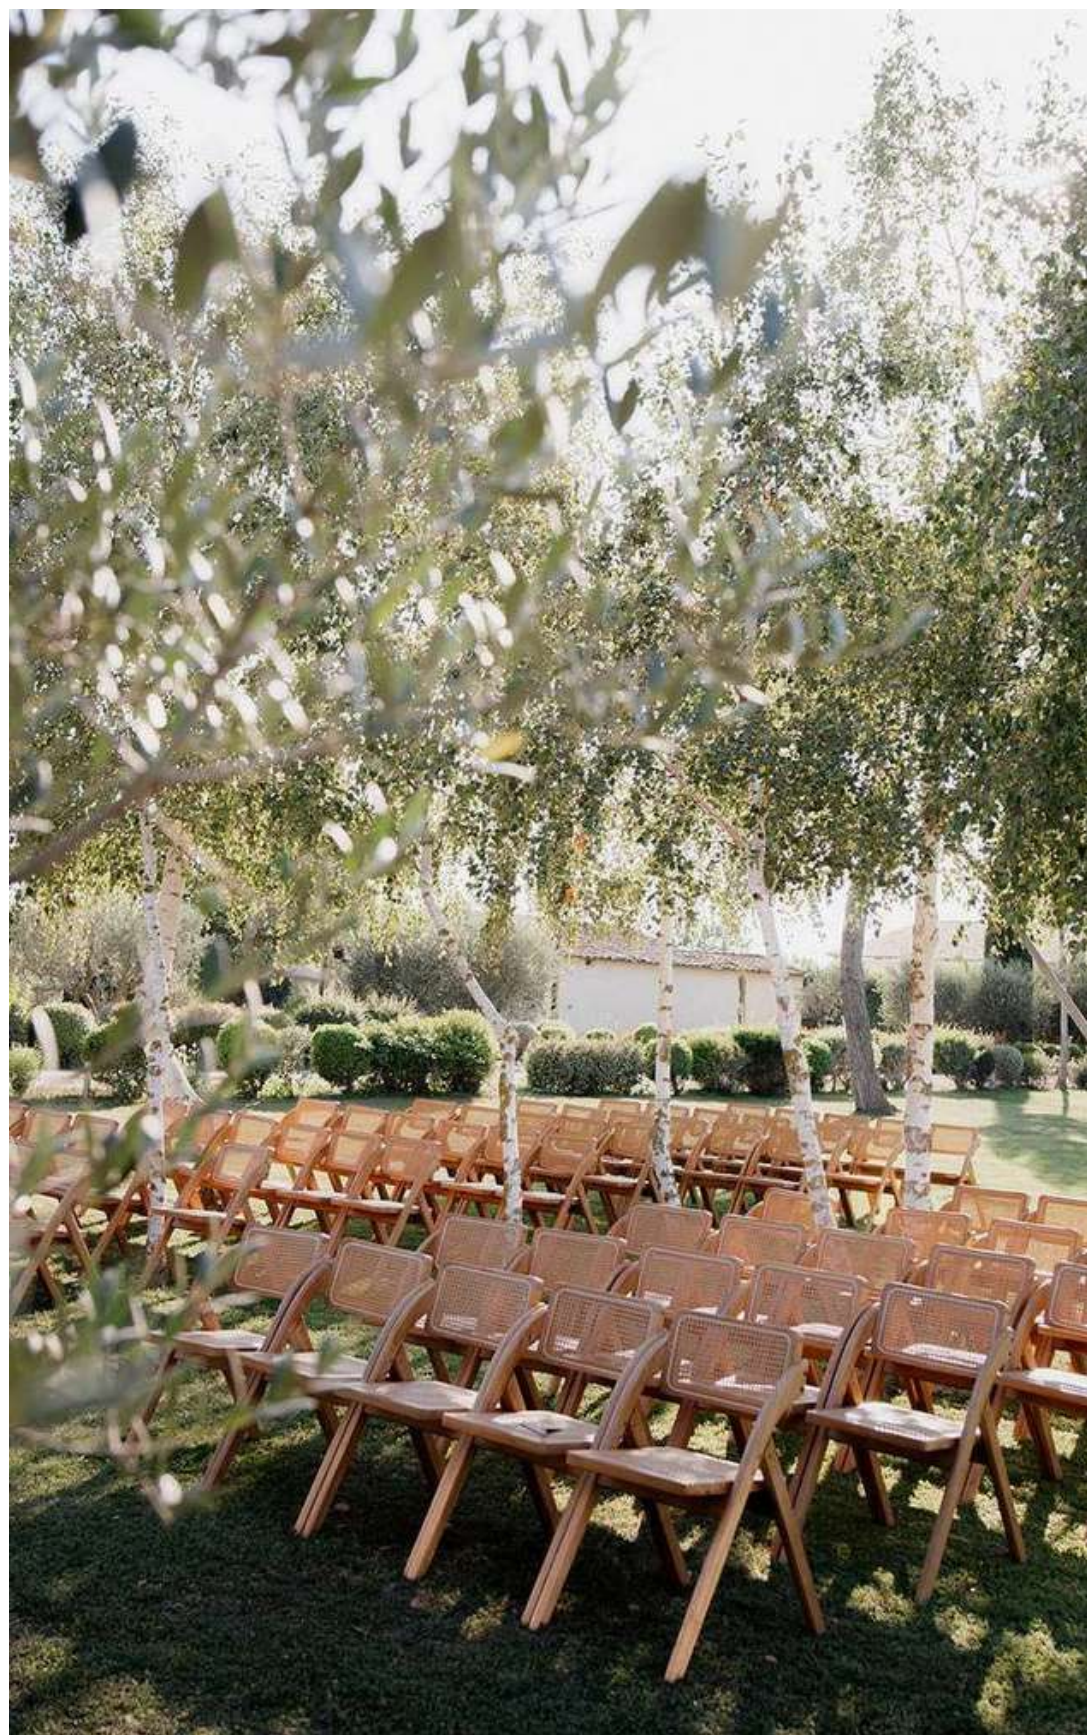

Located at the foot of the Alpilles, Mas de Mauléon is an iconic Provençal house built in the 18th century. A witness to a long agricultural tradition, it has preserved its authenticity while evolving over the centuries.

Originally, the property was dedicated to sheep farming and forage crops. At the beginning of the 20th century, a major transformation took place with the conversion of the land into rice fields. Infrastructure such as pumps and drainage canals was installed to irrigate and manage the crops. This activity continued until the late 1970s.

The Tarascon–Saint-Rémy-de-Provence railway line, inaugurated in 1874 and closed in 1987, once crossed the estate. This unique feature contributed to its renown, attracting travelers and curious visitors alike. During this period, the Mas diversified its agricultural production, cultivating wheat, sunflowers, rapeseed, alfalfa, tomatoes, and lettuces, with the estate then covering 296 acres.

In 2012, Didier Cornille became the current owner. Under his guidance, the estate now spans 104 acres, combining respect for heritage with modernity. Today, Mas de Mauléon embodies a harmonious blend of history, nature, and elegance, offering an exceptional setting for your events and stays in Provence.
